V (geology of mineral resources and industrial potential) includes a regional section,. and. ch. VI (aquatic ecology and marine fisheries) includes a regional section. See also Geology and maps in the Mississippi Valley Section: article text. In brief. References cited at the end of each chapter are listed in the notes and bibliography. The section is organized by chapter, beginning with ch. IV (plants), and ending with ch. VI (oceanography). Each chapter includes a regional section, followed by brief summaries of the physical characteristics of the area. A regional section is subdivided into sub-chapters (sections) with summaries of specific topics. The reference sections provide extensive bibliographies of books and articles that were cited in the text. It is aimed at a not-so-expert audience and is intended to be used as a reference book by those who study the river systems, their geology, and their hydrology. It includes an extensive bibliography, accompanied by other references, of articles, books, and monographs on the river systems of the Mississippi River Basin. In brief. ch. IV (plants) was published in 1954, and described the flora of the Gulf Coast and the floodplains of the Mississippi, Missouri, Illinois, and Ohio Rivers. Of special note are the chapters on the eastern coastal zone of the United States (geology, physiography, hydrogeology, and water-quality issues) and the Great Lakes region of North America (hydrology). The two-volume format has a map-atlas format, with a text and map on each double-page spread. L'Eau de la Saint-Seine is a documentary film about urban water and the territory that it enriches. A farmer and waterman, Achille Métézeau, has had to move his farmstead to the banks of the Saint-Seine in order
