Q: What does U.S. government do to Facebook? Apparently, U.S. government does not want to lose control of Facebook. What does it do? A: The U.S. Government has no control over Facebook, nor does the United States have any laws or regulations in particular that prohibit it or anyone else from doing anything with Facebook. The U.S. government did have some concerns about the possibility that a foreign government would try to use Facebook to influence a U.S. election, but have no direct way to control Facebook. It enacted the Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA) to address that concern (as of 2012). There's a Wikipedia article describing some of the concerns that the U.S. Government had about Facebook. U.S. law regarding political intervention or election influence by foreign governments did not limit the political speech of U.S. citizens. This distinction was reviewed and upheld in a case in 1984 regarding the United States action to prevent the Israeli government from influencing U.S. elections using U.S. citizens to influence U.S. politics. United States v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, AFL-CIO (Milwaukee Milwaukee Leader, August 16, 1984) (available via access.gpo.gov) was a case in which the Supreme Court found (precisely) that Israel did not violate the First Amendment rights of the U.S. citizens it used to influence U.S. politics. The Court found that the U.S. citizens were not prohibited from influencing U.S. politics by the First Amendment. Facebook is not a U.S. Government entity, and the United States has no direct role in regulating it or its activities. It is a private entity, run by citizens of the United States and foreign countries. A: The U.S. government has no law preventing Facebook from doing anything. It has very little influence over Facebook, although the FBI could investigate any objectionable content, but wouldn't have the resources to be able to get into Facebook. That said, there's nothing stopping Facebook or any other company from blocking a U.S. citizen from using Facebook, or from taking action against Facebook's users in other ways. As a technology company, Facebook is affected in a number of ways by the U.S. government. Some of them are: The U.S. government has the authority to break

Effects – A set of filters or other tools that can be applied to images to change their appearance. Examples include: Blur, Desaturate, Colorize, Photo Merge, Gradient Map, Color Balance and Adjust Color. Grow Feature can be used to make a selection look larger. It is useful in areas where you need to select a small part of an image. When you are working in the image window, the grid lines appear behind the document area. These lines help you to better organize and focus on the image. Paint Bucket is designed for applying color or alpha masking. You can choose either a color or a brush from the palette to apply the effect. You can either fill the selection area with a single color, or you can create an alpha mask by painting with the first and final color (which are now identical). Paint bucket brushes have a fairly small brush size and typically paint a wide, even color over a large area. If you are painting very small, intricate areas, using a normal brush should suffice. After you have created a selection, a few options become available depending on the type of selection. In this image, only one is available: Object> Expand. Once you make the selection, the size of the selection area is widened by 400%. Paste Options allows you to choose between deleting the existing image layer or adding a new one. This option is useful when you have multiple selection areas that you want to copy to the same location in the new image. Cut and Copy is a simple command that allows you to copy a selection (or part of a selection). It is useful when you have selected one or more parts of an image and want to move or copy these objects. While you can copy multiple elements, Photoshop automatically creates a clipping mask to make it easy to reapply the same selection to the same image, such as when cropping. After you have created the desired selection, save the image by clicking the Save button. You can save the selection in a different file or in the current file. Click the Exit button to leave the selection and close the image window. You can view the file properties by clicking on the folder icon at the top of the browser window. You can view the contents of the selected file by clicking on the Details button. When you save an image, the file format, width and height are set. The location is determined by the location of the image in the document window. If you have
