using interactive data language (idl), kamsler & bishop (1991) constructed a model of a 2.8-Å resolution cryo-electron microscopy (cryoem) map of the escherichia coli ribosome containing 2-, 3-, and 4-way anticodon interactions. a total of 450 side-chain rotamers per residue were modeled into a single 'proto-map' using the multiple alignment protocol of schöll et al. (1989). the model was optimized for model building by generating a new 3-d backbone-directed rotamer library derived from a secondary structure prediction of the protein and a new base pair library from a crystallographically determined 3-d structure. the present results are superior to those of rader et al. (1989) because they were obtained at higher resolution. a fine tuning of the side chain rotamers was done manually with a stereo viewer, yielding 4-way interactions at low resolution (2-4 Å). an interactive prototype of the full-size cryoem map with 2-way anticodon interactions is available. the only thing to fear is having a false belief. please go to the website of the developer and read the terms & conditions first to make sure you understand what to expect. if you like the software then go ahead
